1. Course Description

1.1 Context

Course overview:

Business Ethics remains one of the core areas of concern for global businesses. Success in business and corporate institutions requires sound understanding of business ethics which traverse between moral, philosophy and culture, the individual and company inherits and exhibits. This is more pertinent in the age of competition where the values of business ethics are undermined.

In the age of globalization, information and communication driven business practices, ethics are more important than they've been in past decades. Breach of ethics will adversely impact the growth and existence of a company, on the other hand, conversely, any efforts made to conduct business ethically will be more apparent and publicly recognized. As more businesses begin to realize the importance of responsible and ethical practices, developing a company ethically is going to become more significant as competitors invest in their respective initiatives. As research indicates, the new generation of talent entering the professional world considers to work for a company that conducts business ethically and responsibly as the benchmark. It also attracts interests from governance institutions and structures to assess the industry practices. Hence the study of Business Ethics is a cornerstone of modern professionalism.

The course will help professionals develop the fundamental perspective of ethical behavior and business success. It also emphasizes on how one can develop ethical principles and how such principles can be incorporated into our moral reasoning processes.
